Our anti-trust laws should be modified to reflect the contemporary marketplace. Microsoft's competitors took advantage of antiquated laws to hurt the company that has provided unprecedented benefit to our society economy productivity as a nation and ability to communicate globally. Free enterprise has prevailed. It is indeed the very size of Microsoft that enabled continuous reinvestment into improving its products. The state of our present computing systems is now well ahead of where it might have been were Microsoft restricted. Re-do the laws. Leave Microsoft alone. Tell the competitors to take their case to the market and not the courts.
